Rich Clark - Giclée Printing &... · Jan 28 ···· Replying to @CarolynTGray and @BBCRadio4 I'd only book with sensible cancellation. I'd only travel within the rules. I'd avoid outlying communities with limited health infrastructure. I'd test before traveling. I'd socially distance. I'd avoid major transport hubs and public transport.

But the Kent strain is too powerful and the South African strain may be even worse. There is now no choice. It is either mass infection with hundreds of thousands of deaths, or elimination (with tens of thousands baked in).

You have to pick one and subordinate ALL policy to it.

They do need to lock us down tho. Like on a real level. Brighton never used to go past 50 cases, if that, per 100,000 and now we're in 404 cases per 100,000. Kent is 750 and londons around the same number. That's ridiculous. Why are we not in #lockdown

Next time you fancy a free couple of weeks break in a hotel, walk onto a Kent beach and if approached say "I no speak English good." Then if they think you're a lying cheating illegal immigrant or criminal carrying a new & dangerous Covid variant, YOU'RE IN, HAPPY HOLIDAY!

On a bank holiday. Meanwhile Kent residents are extremely pissed because so much land has been commandeered for the panic building of lorry parks.

How is booking a holiday "bad behaviour"? And its all very well you chastising people for daring to want some kind of break, but it's obviously not your job or business that's at risk of being lost.

Replying to @ks_1968 @GMB and 3 others

They wanted schools to open at half term. That's not going to happen as the London/Kent virus is too deadly and infectious yet they went "on holiday" last Summer, contributing to this horror. It's killing young people now.

Summary

The most prominent negative sentiment originates from news outlets and associated comments by individuals. Lorries aren't mentioned as much as last month (though they are still mentioned). Being unable to travel due to restrictions and the Covid situation in Kent are hot topics (not helped by the UK strain now often being called the Kent strain).

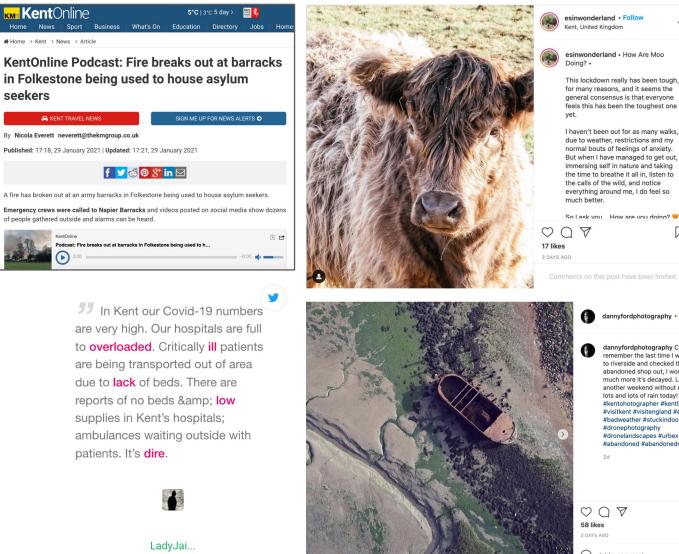

Coronavirus Kent strain symptoms: The 15 symptoms and your risk of hospitalisation

THE NEW strain of coronavirus, first reported in Kent in the UK, may be responsible for the surge in daily deaths, Prime Minister Boris Johnson warned on Friday. Amid the heightened concerns, researchers have catalogued 15 possible warning signs and provided an assessment on the risk of hospitalisation.

I haven't been out for as many walks, due to weather, restrictions and my normal bouts of feelings of anxiety. But when I have managed to get out, immersing self in nature and taking the time to breathe it all in, listen to the calls of the wild, and notice everything around me, I do feel so
